1. Brookings Institution

The Brookings Institution is following its 1967 series of Conferences for Business Executives on Federal Operations with three "refresher" seminars to be held in October, December, and February. While these seminars will not include the regular Agency visits, we have been asked to provide speakers for each seminar. The regular series which includes the Agency-visit phase is scheduled to begin in January.

On 30 August, Admiral Taylor approved the invitations to JCS and DIA personnel to the JCS/DIA Orientation which will be held on 26-27 September at the Headquarters building. The Defense Department is preparing a list of nominees which will include ten officers from SAC. With the exception of the Director, to whom a special invitation will go, all speakers for the two-day program, including Colonel White, Dr. Proctor, Mr. Duckett, Mr. Karamessines, and Mr. Bannerman, have been scheduled for presentations.

25X1A9a 4. Naval War College Graduate's Comments

this past June. Part of his course critique is quoted below:

"The 1966-67 academic year at the Naval War College (NWC) was the year of the 'new look.' Under the dynamic leadership of a new president (Vice Admiral John T. Hayward), the pace of activities was noticeably speeded up, an updated curriculum was in force, and the word was out that this was the year to 'run intellectually.' In many respects the 1966-67 academic year was an experimental one for the NWC, a year for innovations, and characterized best as an intentional departure from the era of the 'gentleman's course.'"

"... The elective course in cold war operations was undoubtedly the most popular and the one which received the most favorable comments from the student body. This course was taught by Professor L. B. Kirkpatrick of Brown University who upheld the image of the Agency admirably throughout the year. I received innumerable favorable comments from students on both the course and the man. The administration of the NWC obviously shares the same view and reflected this when it authorized the final lecture of the cold war course to be conducted in the main auditorium and invited all students and wives to attend. A large and receptive group did attend and clearly enjoyed the lecture presented on future world prospects..."

"Despite an unusually bad year for CIA in the press, the NWC and the student body realisted any temptation to adopt an anti-Agency attitude. The vast majority of people with whom I had contact at the NWC reflected an understanding of, an appreciation for, and at times a sympathetic attitude toward the Agency..."

"The three Agency speakers who delivered lectures during the year contributed materially toward the preservation of a 'good' Agency image..."
